San Antonio Farmer escapes child labor and immigration charges.

A normally quiet Northside San Antonio neighborhood was almost disturbed when a nosy neighbor called authorities earlier this week to report suspicious "sweat shop" like activity in the back yard of TexasRedWorm.com farmer Kyle Harrell. Harrell, a handsome yet suspicious-looking character, was reportedly seen having an "Asian child" working in his back yard. An investigation began, but before local officials could bring him to justice, they realized they simply had a case of a father and his adopted daughter having some fun with their red worm farm. All charges were dropped, and Harrell was released back into the custody of his 3-year-old daughter. (Above picture is not him)

Chupacabre or possum?

Chupacabras, literally "goat suckers," are legendary creatures said to roam Mexico, Puerto Rico and parts of the United States.

Once called the "Bigfoot of Latino culture," there have been many stories about these unidentified animals. Chupacabras are said to kill livestock and tear them to pieces. They are often portrayed as a cross between a dog and a wolf.

Apparent chupacabra sightings spread fear in South Florida in 1996 and Texas in 2008. The chupacabras (continued...p3)
